My husband and I love these packs. We had the original one and just recently bought this one. Every once in a while we'll be sitting around the house wondering "What should we do now?" When we do the same things at work day after day we sometimes run out of interesting things to talk about. In comes the chat pack. Not every question is thrilling, but they do spark interesting conversation when we didn't know we had anything to say. A dull evening at home can quickly turn into a lively conversation. I haven't tried playing in a group, but it seems that it would depend strongly on the people you are playing with. It would be a great ice breaker, but an even better conversation starter for the family around the dinner table. It's definitely worth it to me, for only a few dollars we got hours of meaningful conversation and togetherness.

Such a great item to have sitting on the dining room table. We are a family of 4 and it has created some amazing topics at the dinner table, which then carry over into car rides, walks, etc.

Recommended for any ages, although some of the topics can be a bit challenging for our kids (6 and 8 - ie. any about politics, or topics they have not been introduced to yet). They love them, as do we! Would recommend.

I bought this to use on a future road trip with a friend, but since our trip isn't for a couple months I have been asking the questions to my boyfriend. It's fun because these questions hit on topics that aren't in normal conversation, and we have been able to learn interesting things about one another (not that any of it is particularly useful, but it is fun when you've known someone a long time!).

We went through the original in one long road trip, but this pack had questions that were not as easy for kids to answer. (we had to explain things to them, and even then, they sometimes couldn't come up with an answer. For adults, it is fine.

Hubby is an engineer. He really has enjoyed these talk topics. Instead of trying to think of a conversation, these lead into great discussion. And...the biggie...you learn so much about other people. It's really fun.

These were great for conversation starters as well as in the classroom. These can be good tools for special education programs as well as for armed forces service members to build morale. I have had and used these at parties and have had for over two years and continue to use with old and new friends.

These are just ok, I don't think I would get any more of these types. We have a different type that I got at the same time. I can't remember what they are called but they cost more and are in a clear container box. good fun... but these are kind of cheap feeling.

I'm using these cards to teach English. The students must have an intermediate level in order to use the cards. The themes are dynamic and break away from classroom English.
