How To Write Family Court Statements

Synopsis

This book explains in plain language the purpose of family court statements and the types of information that they should consist of. It explains to readers how important it is to think about how you present information about yourself and the other parent of your child. It makes it clear that both parents are being assessed and that your court statement often says a lot more about you than you think it does. Hence the importance of taking the time to consider how to present yourself in the best possible light. It explains that court statements should be an honest and factual account of the events and circumstances experienced by yourself and your child. The book provides readers with a case study and an example of how court statements can be written using the case study to enhance learning or as a useful guide for parents. The book also offers invaluable tips about how to structure your statement making sure that you focus on the needs and wellbeing of your child and argue your case based on their needs as opposed to yours. It offers guidance on how long your statement should be and offers invaluable insight into the mindset and experience of the Cafcass Officer and the court.
